

Access is 'crown jewel' of venues

Access Showroom, the high-tech, 13,500-square-foot concert venue at Aliante Station, is set to make its public debut Nov. 14 and 15 when Motown legend Smokey Robinson takes the stage.

This world-class theater delivers an unforgettable entertainment experience thanks to state-of-the-art audio equipment and acoustical ceiling panels, which enhance audio by reducing distortion. And although the theatre can seat more than 600 when utilized as a traditional concert venue, the Access Showroom has a club-like feeling of intimacy (the furthest seat from the stage is a mere 75-feet away).

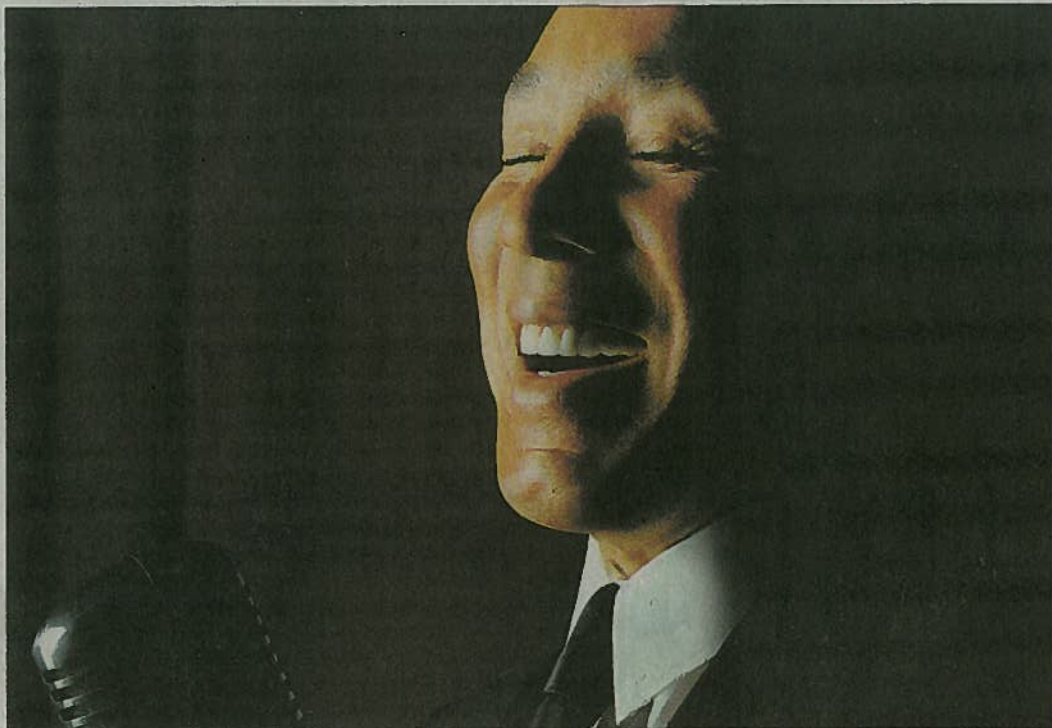

"Access will provide guests to Aliante Station with a great mix of sight, sound and style, making it the crown jewel of the Station Casinos' concert venues," said Judy Alberti, corporate vice president of entertainment for Station Casinos. "The vibrant red hues and clean lines of the space create the perfect backdrop for the amazing performers who will entertain our guests."

The theatre's physical appearance is a mixture of high end and cutting edge, thanks in part to the architectural design by Montreal-based Scéno-Plus, the same firm responsible for constructing Cirque du Soleil-tailored theatres in numerous Las Vegas Strip properties; and interior design is by New York-based Studio Gaia.

The showroom can be complemented by three large video screens on stage to project a mix of immersible imagery to captivate the audience. When set for a concert, the 2,165-square-foot stage and high-impact sound system creates the perfect canvas for the world's top musicians to display their art.

Those wanting VIP treatment need look no further than the posh booths and luxury boxes, both come with table and bottle service; the venue also offers premier sight lines to the action on the stage.

To christen the stage, some of music's biggest stars will headline at Access Showroom this fall, offering a great variety of entertainment for patrons.

"From Motown legend

Smokey Robinson, to Godsmack's Sully Erna, Access Showroom will showcase an eclectic lineup of stars, appealing to every performance style that our guests have come to expect from Station Casinos," Alberti said. "There will truly be something here for everyone."
